

Literary advocate found solice in Glennie

By Kathryn Fritz Kniep
Special to the Review

What do Sinclair Lewis, Clarence Darrow, Erskine Caldwell, Ernest Hemingway, Pearl Buck, Edna Ferber, Norman Cousins and Langston Hughes have in common? All wrote and all appeared at one time or another on a CBS radio program called "Of Men and Books." And, according to Professor Milton Reigelman of Center University in Kentucky, all of them knew something about Glennie.

When Reigelman spoke to a group at the Harrisville Institute of Cultural Learning (HICL) recently, he told his audience that John Towner Frederick, a major force in American Literature in the 20th century and the subject of Reigelman's dissertation, considered Glennie his spiritual home.

The institute is the bequest of the late Dr. Aeneas Constantine. Housed on the grounds and in the former clinic and Constantine family home, it is a non-profit organization dedicated to Constantine's belief that intellectual study and materials to facilitate that study should be housed in small places throughout the world. It houses the doctor's many and varied collections including books, stamps and letters.

Reigelman, a former president of Center College where he has taught for 39 years, is twice a senior Fulbright Scholar and a former student of Frederick, whom he called "the midwife of literature in the Midwest." The catalyst for his presentation was HICL member Sisty Behmer, who came across Frederick's novel "Green Bush" while inventorying books in the Constantine collection and later found transcripts of his radio show and copies of his literary magazine "The Midland" within the collections. Her discoveries and curiosity about the author led to Reigelman.

Frederick was born in Corning, Iowa in 1893. He attended the University of Iowa, leaving the campus for a period of time to serve as principal and superintendent of a small school in Prescott, Iowa. Ultimately, he taught at Moorehouse College in Minnesota, as a full time professor at Medill College in Chicago and was chairman of the English department at Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind.

In 1915, Frederick began publication of a "little" magazine, "The Midland," dedicated to the promotion of Midwestern authors. H.L. Menkin called "The Midland" "the most important magazine ever established in America." The Midland, according to Reigelman, "Created the identification of Midwestern voices and was the most important organ to establish the Midwest as a cultural area."

Near that time, Frederick discovered his second passion - his farm in Glennie.

In 1919, he and his wife, Esther, purchased approximately 1,400 acres east of Glennie. He and his two sons, John and James, spent summers farming and Frederick returned to his teaching duties in the fall.

In the 1950s, Frederick and his wife created a summer camp for city youth on the property, building classrooms and dormitory buildings. The camp was ultimately sold to the United States Forest Service. It became Sprinkler Lake, now owned by the Alcona-Alpena-Montmorency Educational Service District and operated as a math and science center.

In 1937, he began his series of weekly radio programs, "Of Men and Books" which ran until the early 1940s. During that time, Frederick interviewed most of the influential authors of the day including Sinclair Lewis, Willa Cather and Ernest Hemingway.

Frederick dedicated himself to the proposition that New York authors received more than their share of attention from major publishers to the exclusion of Midwestern authors. With co-editor Frank Luther Mott, a 1938 Pulitzer Prize winner, he dedicated himself to "The Midland," ultimately publishing some 400 short stories and many, many poems.

"Evaluating the influence of writing movements is always a qualitative thing," Behmer said, "(it is) difficult to assess and wide-ranging in scope. But there is no doubt that John Frederick's 'little'

Private Forest Planning

Do you own forestland and want to keep that legacy for future generations? Not sure how to start that conversation with your family? A two session workshop will cover both the family interpersonal aspects as well as legal and tax aspects of accomplishing a successful forestland transfer. Michigan State University Extension (MSUE) and the Michigan Department of Natural Resources and Environment (DNRE) Stewardship Program are teaming up to present this workshop, based on the highly successful program designed by Oregon State University.

There are 400,000 family owned forest properties in Michigan, many without plans for succession. As the baby boomer owners reach a certain age, it's important for them to make plans for relatives to enjoy the land for years to come. The workshop will be offered in two parts at the Alpine Center first floor conference room, 200 Livingston Blvd. in Gaylord, Mich., from 6:30 to 9 p.m.,

Wednesday, September 15 and Wednesday, September 22.

The registration fee is $50 for the first person and $10 for additional people from the same family. This covers the cost of both evenings' activities, a workbook, handouts and light refreshments. Registration information is available through the Roscommon County Extension Office. Contact Russell P. Kidd, MSU Extension at (989) 275-5043 or kidd@msu.edu for more information. Must register by Wednesday, September 8.

Farmers Market

Michigan ranks fourth in the nation in the number of active farmers' markets with 271, beaten only by California, New York and Illinois? One of Michigan's farmers' markets is located in Alcona County and it is growing. Everyone is welcome to stop by for great produce and handmade goods. The Wednesday market will be held in the usual location from 3-6pm. However, due to the art show in town this weekend, the Saturday market will be held at the fairgrounds in Lincoln from 9 a.m. to noon.

Items at the market this week are: Muskmelon, garlic, hot peppers, bell peppers, green beans, tomatoes, lots of summer squash varieties, carrots, potatoes, onions, cucumbers, beets, kohlrabi, dinner rolls, pizza by the slice, breads, cut flowers, fresh herbs, handmade Adirondack furniture, Indian prayer sticks, braided sweet grass, coffee, firewood, vegetable books, recipes, framed oil paintings, cookies, pies and other bakery items, honey, caramel corn, fudge, sugar-coated nuts and chocolate-coated pretzels.

On Wednesday only, market goers will find blackberries, grass-fed meats and poultry, free-range eggs, and Southwestern-style jewelry made from wood, bone, semi-precious stones and shells. On Saturday only, they will find cabbage, eggplant, corn, English cucumbers, rhubarb, pears, daikon radishes, lettuce, peas, spinach, broccoli, jams and jellies, dried fruit, freshly-milled whole wheat flour, freshly-milled organic cornmeal, salt-free herb seasonings, jalapeño jams, raw honey, fresh trout, more varieties of fresh herbs and hand-made rugs.

The market is located on US-23 in Harrisville, one third of a mile south of the M-72 intersection. Park at the back of the market, or, with a handicap sticker, in the handicap parking near the building. In order to receive weekly updates of market offerings, send an e-mail to Harrisville-Market@gmail.com.

Recycling Electronics

Residents of northeastern Michigan will soon be able to take advantage of a special electronics recycling event planned to be held in Alpena at the Resource Recovery Facility located at 4395 West M-32. The collection event will take place on Saturday, Sept. 18 from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. and is being sponsored by the Alpena County Supervisors Association and 5R Processors Limited of Ladysmith, Wisc.

Items to be collected at no charge to residents will include: Computers, monitors and keyboards, printers, fax machines and copiers, television sets, radios, stereos and tape players. All units should be intact with no disassembled units or boxes of loose parts. Any resident or business of less than 10 employees in northeastern Michigan is welcome to participate.

Michigan Senate Bill 897 states that, beginning April 1, manufacturers of covered electronic devices who sell their goods in Michigan are required to provide a take-back program. This take-back program has enabled new market opportunities for electronics recyclers which has made this type of collection program possible. Electronics items will be accepted at the facility at no charge until the September 18 deadline. Any area resident with questions may call the Alpena Resource Recovery Facility daily (except Thursday) at (989) 354-2607 from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. or call Tom Pelkey evenings at (989) 379-3386.

magazine influenced 'big' writers and writing of the 20th century in America. Those writing in regions heretofore ignored by the large publishing houses, found their voice in the pages of "The Midland."

Wallace Stegner said about Frederick, "...his work had been done in and for Iowa and the Middle West and made this unselfish and helpful critic and editor the greatest single force in Iowa letters in the past 25 years." Frederick is credited with developing and nurturing a "quiet literary movement" in the Midwest.

Frederick's grandchildren, Susan Frederick Bartwick and Kristin Frederick LaPalm, Martha Frederick Clapsaddle and Michael Frederick, who attended the presentation remember their grandfather as a quiet man in overalls, always ready to read a story and from whom "not a weed was safe." The family presented the HICL with a copy of their grandfather's novel, "GreenBush."

During his time in Alcona County, Frederick served for a time on the local road commission. He was a driving force in the consolidation of the local school system, where his son James taught for most of his career.

He authored two novels, "Druida" in 1923 and "GreenBush" in 1925, and many textbooks, short stories, poems, plays and reviews. The body of his work, stored in the archives of Iowa University, takes up an area 27 feet long.

Among his short stories is one entitled "On The Key At Smirna." Smirna was the birthplace of Constantine, founder of the HICL and underscores Reigelman's belief that the two men knew one another. "I've always wondered who, in this area, he found to talk to," Reigelman said. "It seems likely that it was the local intellect, Dr. Constantine."

In 1939, "The Midland" ceased publication due to the Great Depression. Frederick literally wrote its epitaph and shouldered its remaining bills. Prior to that, however, he commented on how far he had to travel while in Glennie to mail the publication. He continued to teach at Notre Dame until 1962 at which time the university awarded him an honorary Ph.D in American literature. At the time he was attending college, no such degree was available.

He returned to Iowa City, Iowa and became a visiting professor at the University of Iowa. In 1975, just shy of his 82nd birthday, he passed away. He, along with his first wife, Esther, rest in Springport Cemetery south of Harrisville.

There can be little doubt of Frederick's love of teaching, of writing and of the northern Michigan area. On September 15, 1922, he closed his comments in "The Midland" with the following paragraph:

"I am writing these editorials at Glennie. The season is one of supreme beauty in a region always beautiful. The sweep of the long reaches of second growth is suffused with a richness of the approach of autumn. Half hidden by the roadside and about the lake blaze single limbs of maple already colored: ripe orange, vivid scarlet, crimson. The lakes sleep, their waters dulled to gray by the gardens of strange plants that rim their depths. The last whippoorwills call, the bluebirds and plovers gather for their flight. The time and place have, even in this brief sojourn, something of such fulfillment as life accords us. Here is, for today, perfected beauty, wholly of the earth.”

 Roger Lemons, president of the HICL Board of Directors said he was delighted with the standing room only audience attending the first major event at HICL. “This presentation is exactly what the institute was intended to do,” he said. “This type of information is its true treasure. We don’t get paid for being here. This – this type of synchronicity, research such as that done by Sisty, this is how we eventually profit from being here.”

SENIOR LIFESTYLES

Alternative travel accommodations

Dear Savvy Senior,
My wife and I love to travel, but hotel costs eat up our budget so fast we can't stay as long, or go as often as we'd like to. I've heard that there are various alternative lodging options that offer free or low-cost accommodations to seniors. What can you tell us about this?

Retired Travelers

Dear Retired,
It's true! You can save lots of money when you travel by skipping pricey hotels and opting for an alternative form of lodging. Here are some different options to consider.

One way to get free accommodations when you travel is by swapping homes with someone who's interested in visiting the area where you live. To make a swap, you'll need to join an online home exchange service where you can list your home and get access to thousands of other listings. Then you simply e-mail the owners of houses or apartments you're interested in - or they e-mail you - and you make arrangements.

Most home exchange sites like homeexchange.com, digsville.com, intervacusa.com charge membership fees ranging from $45 to $100, or try craigslist.org which offers a house-swap section for free.

If you're willing to undertake a few household chores another way to get free lodging here in the U.S. and abroad is by house sitting.

You live in someone else's home while they're away for a long weekend or even a few months. And in exchange for the free accommodations, you take care of certain responsibilities such as their pets, lawn, mail, et cetera. To find these opportunities try sites like caretaker.org, house-carers.com, housesitters-america.com and sabbatical-homes.com - they all charge a small membership fee.

If you like staying in bed-and-breakfasts and have a spare bedroom yourself, consider the Evergreen Club (evergreenclub.com) or the Affordable Travel Club (affordabletravelclub.net). These are bed-and-breakfast clubs for older travelers that offer inexpensive lodging in the spare bedroom of other club members, or they may stay with you when they're on the road. You pay a modest gratuity of between $10 and $20 per night, with breakfast. And the clubs charge membership fees of $60 to $80 per year.

Staying at a hostel is another inexpensive option to consider. While hostels have historically offered shared dormitory and bathroom accommodations with other guests, many hostels today are offering private rooms, swimming pools, hot tubs, free Internet, along with kitchens that guests can use to cook their own food. To search, see hostels.com and hostelworld.com.

If you're planning on visiting a big city in the U.S. or foreign country for a week or more, renting a fully furnished apartment can save you the expense of a hotel and eating out every meal. Short-term apartment rentals are available through managed property brokers and individual owners. To search visit roomorama.com or craigslist.org and click on "vacation rentals." Or go to any online search engine and type in your destination city plus short-term apartments (for example "New York short-term apartments").

If you're traveling with your kids or grandkids you can save money by renting a house or condo versus multiple hotel rooms. Most properties rent by the week or month. To find these options try sites like pickpackgo.com, homeaway.com, zonder.com, rental.com, vrbo.com and craigslist.org. For resort destinations, check out resortquest.com. And for time share rentals see myresortnetwork.com and redweek.com. Or go to google.com and type in the place you want to visit followed by "vacation rentals."

(Send your senior questions to: Savvy Senior, P.O. Box 5443, Norman, OK 73070, or visit SavvySenior.org. Jim Miller is a contributor to the NBC Today show and author of "The Savvy Senior" book.)

Add making a will to your to do list

Senior News Line
By Matilda Charles

Your age, health status and list of assets don't matter - we all need to have an up-to-date will. We never know what tomorrow will bring.

Writing a will is one of those projects that you don't want to do yourself. One of those do-it-yourself legal packages might be a place to start, but only to use as a reference.

Make notes, look at a copy of any previous will you've written and pencil in any changes you'd like. Create a list of your assets: real estate, antiques, family heirlooms and anything else of value.

Decide how your belongings and money are to be divided up. Are there children and grandchildren? Have they expressed a desire to have particular items? Do you have favorite causes?

Your safest course is to find an attorney to draft up the final version. An attorney can advise you on the tax implications of any steps you want to take, as well as your state laws. For example, in many states the law outlines how much of the estate must be left to a spouse, or perhaps you need to create a trust.

Find an executor. Be sure to ask if that person is willing to handle the details. Settling an estate can be time consuming (depending on how many debts you leave and how many property assets you own). You may need to find an attorney to act as executor. Granted, an attorney will have to be paid out of the estate, but in most situations that might be your best route.

An adult child is often asked to handle estates, but that can cause ill feelings if there are siblings.

No matter which route you take to produce your will, remember that you need witnesses to your signature, and they can't be anyone who benefits from your will.

Matilda Charles regrets that she cannot personally answer reader questions, but will incorporate them into her column whenever possible. Write to her in care of King Features Weekly Service, P.O. Box 536475, Orlando, FL 32853-6475, or send e-mail to columnreply@gmail.com.

Huskies nip Tigers in opening game

By Dan O'Connor
Sports Writer

In Dave Schneider's debut as varsity football head coach, the Alcona Tigers lost 21-20 last Friday at Alcona High School.

Although it was a tough loss, Schneider felt it was a well played game, for the most part, for both teams. "It was a fun game to be a part of, much like a chess match. Each team made adjustments throughout, but a loss still tastes bad," Schneider said.

Early on it looked like the Tigers were on the right track. Senior quarterback Ernie Brockwell led his team down field and finished off the drive on his own with a 14 yard touchdown scamper that put Alcona up 6-0.

The Huskies came back led by big plays through the air to help long drives move into the red zone. Atlanta scored twice before halftime to take a 13-6 lead.

"We were eager to get to halftime to make some adjustments. With so many players playing both ways (both offense and defense) we needed some time to talk and make a few strategic changes," Schneider said.

The Tigers charged out of the gates in the second half and seemed ready to blow the game open led by freshman halfback Nathan Fettes. Fettes scored from 22 yards out on the Tigers' first drive in the second half and again on their following drive with a 81 yard touchdown run to put Alcona in front 20-13 midway through the second half.

"I was pretty happy how we handled the adversity in the first half and came back and righted the ship early in the second half," Schneider said.

With less than eight minutes to go in the fourth quarter the Tigers were faced with a fourth down just inside Huskies territory. Alcona elected to go for it and had the possibility of running the clock out or putting Atlanta away with another touchdown. With the game on the line the Huskie defense stood tall stopping Alcona and taking over possession at midfield.

Atlanta marched down field running four minutes off the clock before scoring and adding the two point conversion to take a 21-20 lead with under four minutes left.

The Tigers last drive was foiled by a fumble ending their chance for a comeback victory.

The loss was bittersweet for Schneider who coached Atlanta for the previous two seasons and coached many of the players. "I don't like to lose any game, but I was proud of both groups of kids for a well played game," he said. N. Fettes led Alcona with 132 yards on nine carries while Aaron Hoeft added 11 tackles on the defensive side of the ball.

The Tigers (0-1) now turn their attention to AuGres (0-1). Alcona travels to the Wolverines on Thursday night. AuGres lost to North Huron 34-20 in week one.

"They (AuGres) will definitely provide different matchups and are big and fast, but I believe the matchups favor us," Schneider said.

Alcona has defeated AuGres the last three years, including 35-28 last season. "A loss only has to taste bad for a week then you can work that taste out on your next opponent. We are looking forward to a good week of practice and turning our full attention to AuGres," Schneider said.

The varsity and junior varsity will both play on Thursday night at AuGres High School with the JV playing at 5 p.m. and varsity starting at 7 p.m.

Lady Tigers face tough opening opponents

By Dan O'Connor
Sports Writer

The Alcona varsity volleyball team began its season last week with tough defeats at Arenac Eastern and at the Alpena Quad.

On Tuesday, Aug. 24 the Lady Tigers traveled to Arenac Eastern and jumped out to a first game 25-22 victory. However, the Eagles stormed back to take the next two games 12-25 and 19-25. The Lady Tigers raced out to a six point lead early in the fourth game only to see the Eagles grab a 20-17 cushion and win it 23-25.

Leading Alcona was Alexa LeCureux with six kills, Emily Wojcik added six aces, Katie Buresh added five aces and Lexie Cook added four.

Despite the loss, coach

Ashlie O'Connor saw positives. "It was good to get on the floor and play against an opposing school and we are starting to get accustomed to our rotation," she said.

On Thursday, Aug. 26 in Alpena the Lady Tigers faced off against three schools in an important early season tune-up. The Lady Tigers were defeated by Alpena (19-25, 15-25 and 11-25) and Cheboygan (13-25, 10-25 and 9-25).

Coach O'Connor knows playing the competition that they did at the Quad will be something they can refer back to later in the year. "Playing larger schools like Alpena and Cheboygan will help us down the road no matter the results and will prepare us for any school that we will face left on our schedule," she said.

Alcona did fare better against Rogers City who they did nab a second game win against (20-25, 25-23, 10-25).

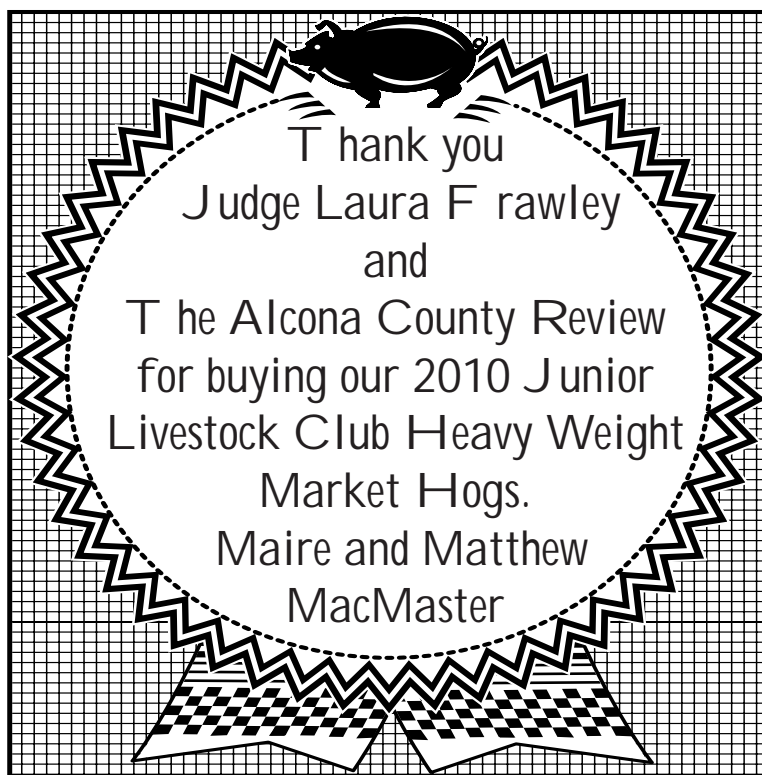

"Rogers City is a historically good program and for us to get a game is a step in the right direction. A day like today will help us prepare for districts," added Coach O'Connor.

The Lady Tigers (0-4) host Fairview September 2 and travel to Whittemore-Prescott on September 8.

By Ali Kramer
Sports Writer

The Alcona Varsity soccer team played the Alpena Wildcats on Monday, Aug. 23 and were defeated 0-3, but tallied later in the week against Harbor Springs.

Alcona played a good game defensively during the first half holding the Wildcats with a score of 0-1, Tigers down. The Tigers went into the second half and were able to hold the Wildcats down to two goals.

On Wednesday, Aug. 25 the Tigers went up against Harbor Springs at home.

The Tigers went into the first half strong with Jared Steiner scoring the first goal. At the end of the first half the score was 1-3, Tigers down.

During the halftime meeting Coach Jim Bouchard told the team they had everything they needed to beat this team -- but it was up to them.

The pep talk worked. During the second half the Tigers staged a comeback by scoring six more goals.

Two goals were scored by Bryan Layton, assisted by Jared Steiner and by Roddy Forsythe. Alex Cole scored and was assisted by William Bates. Steiner scored two more goals, he was assisted by Layton and William Bates. The final score for the evening was Alcona 7, Harbor Springs 3.

Business Brief

Alcona Coffee of Harrisville has expanded into ice cream and by Christmas will have a new place to call home. The restaurant, located on Main Street across from Richard's Pharmacy, offers brewed coffee, sandwiches, snacks, baked goods and retail items like packaged coffee, opened on Labor Day weekend in 2006. Owner Pat Bushey of Black River was pleased to be able to expand the business when he purchased the building next door (formerly The Cove, a gift and ice cream shop) in May. On Memorial Day weekend he opened the ice cream shop and plans to move the restaurant into the "new" building by the holidays. "We will have everything under one roof and we are looking forward to that," Bushey said. "We will have expanded seating and expanded retail items available then." For more information about Alcona Coffee, stop in and visit Bushey or call (989) 724-7071. Photo by Cheryl Peterson.

St. Joseph HealthKey receives support for Operation Backpack

St. Joseph HealthKey, with the support from Wal-Mart, Neiman's Family Market and Save-A-Lot will sponsor its third annual Operation Backpack community outreach program. Operation Backpack was created to lend a hand-up for families with school-aged children who may be struggling with the added expenses of the new school year. Operation Backpack has over 225 backpacks and 150 refill supply packs that will be distributed to schools in Arenac, Alcona and Iosco counties.

Participants of Operation Backpack are identified by the HealthKey program and in partnership with local school administrators.

"We are very grateful to these businesses who value the importance of giving back to their community and didn't hesitate when we asked for their support," said Cathy Maxwell, HealthKey Executive Director. "Because of their generosity and that of other community partners, we were able to enhance this year's program by providing families and their children with nutritious snack items and personal care necessity bags to support a successful start to a new school year."

Other partners included New Hope Church, Christian Women in Action, Christ Episcopal Church, Serendipity Sisters Red Hat Chapter, Iosco County Youth Advisory Council, St. Joseph Volunteers and JanSport, Inc. HealthKey staff and volunteers have begun filling the backpacks and necessity bags they plan to gift to 300 area children over the next two weeks.

St. Joseph HealthKey was established in 2004 to identify and support the needs of the uninsured and underinsured families in our community. Since its inception, they have worked with more than 2,800 families providing assistance with prescription drugs, chronic disease management, access to medical homes, food and shelter resource assistance and much more. Totally for toads

By Mary Weber

Special to the Review

Toads, in general, are rather ugly amphibians; they have dry warty skin, short stocky legs, a large wide head and rotund body. If frogs were Ferraris (shiny, sleek and fast), then toads would surely be the rusty trusty minivan with a lot of miles and a few bumps and dings in the body.

Both have four wheels and an engine, just one looks better and is a little faster at getting from A to B.

Perhaps the toad just didn't have the right agent marketing its attributes. Frogs are cute and their sales appeal has taken over the toad's

For many centuries toads have gotten a bad rap. The warty appearance of the toad created a stigmatic folk tale that if you touched a toad you would get warts. I even remember my mother telling me this when I was a little girl. I'm sure she knew that it was not true; you cannot get warts from a toad. Perhaps she knew about the toad's other defenses but just didn't want to share all the details with me.

When attacked, a toad can produce a noxious secretion. The secretion irritates mucous membranes and can be poisonous to small mammals if they decide to have a toad they really are....pest eating wonders!

The common Eastern American Toad also known as the "hop toad" can live almost anywhere in Michigan. They are at home in heavily forested woodlands, shady backyards, along lake-shore coves, urban yards as well as large agricultural fields.

They breed primarily in freshwater ponds but will also use temporary pools, ditches, artificial ponds and shallow streams of water for breeding. Unlike frogs that spend most of their life in and around the water, toads have their splash in the water for just a few weeks at breeding time in the spring.

The rest of their summer days are spent out of the water eating a variety of bugs and insects. Studies have shown that an average size toad (two to four inches) can consume around 10,000 pesty bugs in a three month period. This to me is a significant reason to sing the praises of toads and the more I see in my garden the better.

During the day toads like to stay hidden in the shade, where conditions are moist spotlight. It's not likely we will ever see a toad singing "It ain't easy being green" to the younger population while they are busy learning their letters and numbers from a variety of characters on a street called Sesame.

Frogs have even appeared during the Super Bowl as they rhythmically croaked out their names "Bud," "Weis" and "Er" during half time well over a decade ago. Even the fairy tale princesses knew to kiss a frog, not a toad, to get their handsome prince.

snack. A toad also has the ability to inflate themselves with air which would make them difficult for smaller predators such as snakes or birds to swallow. Their most unappealing defense to me is that when a human picks up a toad they will often urinate. Yuck! It is advised to avoid getting toad skin secretions into your eyes, nose or mouth.

Maybe these are the reasons toads have missed the boat on super stardom, but the more I garden, the more I appreciate the toad for who

Although many people immediately think of deer when the subject of hunting pops up, there is a world of fun to be had in Michigan hunting small game.

Small game season begins September 1 with the opening of Canada goose hunting and continues non-stop until rabbit and hare season closes on March 31 – seven full months of outdoor recreational opportunity for. There are new and expanded opportunities in 2010.

Rabbits

Season: Cottontail rabbits and varying (also known as snowshoe) hares can be hunted from September 15 – March 31, statewide. Daily bag limit is five (in combination) with a possession limit of 10.

Outlook: Some 80,000 hunters pursue rabbits and hares in Michigan. Cottontail numbers are good throughout much of the state. Thick cover – such as briar patches or brush piles – often near agricultural fields is the ticket. Hare populations are cyclical and have been in the downward trend because of declining habitat. Look for hares in early successional forests, such as aspen stands, and in brushy cover in low-lying swamps in the northern two-thirds of the state.

Squirrels

Season: September 15 – March 1. Hunters may take five per day with 10 in possession.

Outlook: Both fox squirrel and black squirrel numbers are good across much of the state. Look for areas with good mast production or in woodlots adjoining agricultural areas, especially corn fields. Squirrel hunting in winter has increased in popularity in recent years. About 80,000 hunters pursue squirrels in Michigan.

Ruffed Grouse

Season: September 15 – November 14 and December 1 – January 1, 2011. Daily bag limit is five, with 10 in possession in the northern two-thirds of the state; three, with six in possession in Zone 3 (southern Michigan).

Outlook: Ruffed grouse populations are cyclical, generally rising and falling over a 10-year period and should be at or near the peak of the cycle this fall, though good habitat is extremely important. Grouse live in early successional forests – such as young to moderate-aged aspen and tag alders.

Areas with good mast and berry production typically hold grouse. Although more numerous in the Upper Peninsula and northern Lower Peninsula, grouse can be found in southern Michigan in areas with good habitat. Grouse seem to attract more hunters – about 89,000 – than any other small-game hunting opportunity.

Woodcock

Season: September 25 – November 8. The daily bag limit is three with six in possession.

Outlook: The good news for woodcock hunters is that populations, which have been in a slow steady decline for 40 years, seems to have stabilized over the last five years, so hunters can expect similar results to last year. Found statewide, woodcock are migratory birds, so areas that seem to be devoid of birds early in the season can often be productive later on with peak migration through northern Michigan occurring in mid October.

Often associated with grouse hunting, woodcock utilize early successional forests, often along streams, seeps or other wet areas where they feed by probing for earthworms and other invertebrates. Hunters are reminded they must have a Harvest Information Program (HIP) endorsement printed on their small game licenses to take woodcock. See the 2010 Michigan Hunting and Trapping Guide for details.

Sharp-tailed Grouse

Season: The season is October 10-31, east of M-129 north to M-48, then east of I-75, only. The bag limit is two per day, four in possession, and six per season.

Outlook: Michigan has not held a season for sharp-tailed grouse since 1996. The season is reopening in a relatively small portion of the birds' habitat, mostly on private land. Sharptails inhabit grasslands with some brush, often - but not exclusively -

Wayne counties only.

Outlook: Michigan is the northern limit of quail range and bird populations are patchy, but an outstanding spring nesting season should expand opportunity this year. Roughly 2,000 hunters report pursuing quail.

Ducks

Season: September 18-19 statewide for youths only; October 2 - November 30 in the North Zone; October 2 - November 28 and December 4-5 in the Middle Zone; and October 9 - December 5 and January 1-2, 2011 in the South Zone. Hunters may take six duck daily with no more than four mallards (only one hen), three wood ducks, two redheads, two scaup, two pintails, one black duck and ber 1-10 in the Upper Peninsula and Huron, Tuscola and Saginaw counties; September 1-15 elsewhere. Daily bag is five.

Regular season: September 16-30 in the North Zone; October 2 - November 8 and November 25 - December 1 in the Middle Zone; and October 9- November 14 and December 4-11 in the South Zone. Daily Bag is two.

In the Saginaw and Huron/Tuscola Goose Management Units, October 9 - November 14, December 4-11, and January 1-30, 2011. Daily bag is two.

In Allegan County GMU, December 4-23 and December 30 - January 23, 2011; daily bag limit is two.

In Muskegon Waste Water GMU, October 14 - No-

Small game season lasts for seven months with rabbit hunting extending to March 31.

in areas with agriculture.

Pheasants

Season: October 10-31 in the Upper Peninsula; October 20-14 in the Lower Peninsula; and December 1 - January 1, 2011 in selected areas of Zone 3. The limit is two roosters daily, four in possession.

Outlook: Although pheasant populations have been in long-term decline; brood observations indicate a very successful spring production season in 2010. The best habitat is typically on private land, though some state game areas offer some opportunity. The best pheasant areas are usually in the south-central counties of the state moving northward and toward the east into the Thumb.

Look for warm-season grasses; areas adjoining picked agricultural fields are often productive. Approximately 46,000 hunters pursue pheasants in Michigan.

Quail

Season: October 20 - November 14 in Branch, Calhoun, Clinton, Easton, Genesee, Gratiot, Hillsdale, Huron, Ingham, Ionia, Jackson, Kent, Lapeer, Lenawee, Livingston, Macomb, Monroe, Montcalm, Oakland., Saginaw, St. Clair, St. Joseph, Sanilac, Shiawassee, Tuscola, Washtenaw and one canvasback. Hunters may take an additional five mergansers (no more than two hooded mergansers). Possession limit is two days' daily bag limit.

Outlook: Michigan's 41,000 duck hunters have cause for optimism. Continent-wide, the fall flight is predicted to be similar to last year, though surveys show the Michigan mallard population is up 31 percent from last year. Mallards are the most numerous ducks in the hunters' bags.

Canada Geese

Early season is September 14 and December 2-14; daily bag is two. Late Season is January 1-30, 2011 in the South Zone; daily bag limit is five.

Outlook: Prospects are excellent for the state's 35,000 goose hunters. The resident Canada goose population is estimated to be 300,000, the second highest count on record. The Mississippi Valley Population, which migrates through the western portion of the state, is up. The South James Bay Population, which migrates through the eastern portion of the state, is stable.

and food sources are abundant. At night our landscape lights around our deck attract moths and we will often see toads sitting next to the lights. Toads are nocturnal and perhaps they are just waiting for an easy meal to pass by the light...but then again maybe, just maybe, that's the toad's tiny stage and they are just striving to soak up some of the limelight that their cousin frogs have been getting for years.

As regular readers are aware, I've never been much of a sleeper. When I do sleep, I sleep like a felled oak and when I don't, I don't. But lately, my chronic insomnia has undergone a sea change, going from the conventional middle of the night schedule to what I've come to think of as "reverse insomnia."

Thus, I tuck in earlier and earlier, unable to keep my eyes open, and nod off to dreamland just moments after my head hits the pillow. Then, around four, I come to, totally awake and unable to return to sleep. It's led, this summer, to what turns out to be a perfectly splendid way to start the day.

Somewhere in the gray hours before dawn, the dogs and I stumble down the stairs. They flop out the door to check out the lawn while I flip the switch on the coffee pot. At that hour, the grass still holds the damp of early dew and the world is just slightly out of focus, objects grayed in silhouette, but not quite illuminated enough to hold form just yet.

Henri usually bounds back in the door to munch his biscuit and hop back up the stairs for a few more hours dozing with dad, but Lady is content to curl up on the couch next to me and get the fur on her feet in order while I start my day. It's the hour that the Folger's Coffee people try to capture in their ads, quiet, still a little dark, too early, the day to begin making demands.

That first cup is a thing of comfort, as is the open window next to my seat, through which I can hear the birds beginning their warm up songs and feel the occasional morning breeze. Some mornings this summer have already proven hot by four or five, on others it's been raining (my favorite), but most contain the nicest cool of the day.

I turn the television on just above mute and don't pay it much attention. Eventually someone will tell me what the weather will be and if anything of consequence happened during the night. Early morning news people seem to understand that those watching don't want "cute" delivery or advice on how to shop for trendy things, they just want the five w's, delivered in soft tones.

I sip my coffee and let my body unfurl from the crinks and bunches of the night's sleep, slowly feel my brain slip from standby to full power. It would be a good time, I often think, to go for an early morning walk or do some yoga, if only that didn't involve leaving the couch and washing my face and putting on something presentable. Instead, I take this time to contemplate.

Eventually, I'll begin a mental list of things I need to do today, things I need to pick up for dinner, maybe even come up with a plan for world peace. But just now, I sit, clutching my blue mug and letting the world slowly shift into view. Virtually every morning it reminds me of coming up out of the lake after that first dive. Slowly, things outside shift from a blur to a form to a clear picture as the sun creeps over the horizon.

And slowly, the world begins to wake up. An ambitious early-morning jogger and her remarkably fast little dog zip by. The buzz of cars up on the highway picks up steam. I use this time, awake but not yet into full forward mode, to sew, to paint, maybe to take a notion and whip up a batch of blueberry-apricot scones for breakfast. Maybe to jot down a few words or read something.

I take a few minutes, most days, to talk with my higher power. A quick thank you for another morning. A gentle reminder that the kid in Afghanistan means something to a lot of us. A concern. A celebration.

During these early morning moments, as I pad around in my bare feet, I've come to appreciate the positive aspects that those who take a vow of silence must experience. Lady and I don't talk much. I stroke her silky head and ruffle her ears, run a finger down the line of her noble muzzle. She's content with that. She doesn't feel the need to fill the silence, nor do I, except with the silent silver string that stretches between us.

Puttin' On

It's a perfect time of day. A time to let the well refill, to recharge the small, essential store of serenity we each carry inside us somewhere. Why, I wonder, did I fight so hard for so long to sleep away these hours?

Well, of course, because for most of my adult life, the world was too much with me. I was tired. There were chores to perform and tasks awaiting, children to get off to school and work to attend. Now, in these days of early retirement, all of that can be put off for a bit, dealt with in the daylight.

And this time, well, this time is purely mine. Time to carry my second cup out onto the deck and consider the pinks and oranges the morning is producing at the skyline. Moments to stand quietly, breathing in the morning, picking the dead heads off the flowers in their pots or admiring the growth spurt of the green tomatoes hanging on their vines. All of it wordless, all of it conducted in a soft and gentle time.

Lately, the sun has been showing up a little later, muttering excuses about heavy traffic. Peering at the calendar to ascertain one more time just exactly when Labor Day falls this year, I realize that this summer romance may very well not survive the fall.

There will come to mornings when the floor is just too chilly on the feet, the covers just too cozy. The day when I mutter to myself, "Oh heck, it will all be there tomorrow," roll over and snuggle back into the warm. But just now, this early morning world is where I want to be.

Eventually, the birds will burst into their first showy real number. It will be time to start the day, to wave to the city maintenance guys, making their first rounds of the community. Ernie, the neighborhood's visual clock, will stroll by with Trouble, the beagle, on their morning walk. Time to put on something more appropriate than my mismatched night clothes, begin to assemble those random morning thoughts into a genuine written list, put on a second pot of coffee for my soon-to-wake spouse.

But just now -- just now, as the tardy sun slips into his seat and the lake calls the meeting to order, the subtle joy of knowing we've decided to do it all again today is enough and more. And that, to answer the questions of friends and family, is why I get up so early these days.

Because I can. Because this time is mine. Because I like it here, when God's in his heaven and all's right with the world.

That old jack magic

By Jim Gagnier
Guest Columnist

One of the old favorite songs from the forties...right? No, not quite. But that play on words took on a whole new meaning in our household earlier in this pleasant summer we're enjoying.

For a few days in July we had visions of grandeur beyond belief with prospects of unbelievable free phone service to any place we chose to contact either in these great 50 states of "E Pluribus Unum" or any outpost in that frigid domain of our neighbors to the north. Alright, I exaggerate. Not exactly free, maybe.

But for a cost of $19.95 per year who's going to quibble? That's about $1.67 per month and I submit that's about as much freedom as a body can expect in this day and age.

I kind of pride myself on keeping up with any new ideas that results in a little more coin jingling in my pockets, but I must confess I was blind sided on this one. A neighbor down in Florida brought this little device to my attention.

When he informed me that you could purchase a little box for less than 50 bucks that would include telephone service for a year and that all subsequent yearly service could be had for $19.95 per year, I thought I'd died and gone to heaven. Of course the cautious side of me took charge at first. "It's got to be a trick" I told my better half.

But the "cheap-skate" side of me prevailed and I found myself at the drug store plunking down my credit card and going in "hook, line, and sinker" as they say. The mysterious box turned out to be quite small...maybe the size of a hand held calculator. It exhibited one USB cable and what looked like an ordinary telephone jack.

What in the world "USB" means, I have no idea -- maybe Uninformed, Simple, Brains. But I did find the matching jack in my computer and plugged it in. The final step was to connect the included telephone wire from the magic box to any telephone or telephone jack in the house and just like that we were in business.

It was simple and the whole procedure didn't take me more than two or three hours tops. But you have to remember I am somewhat technically challenged as our grandkids so diplomatically put it. And I did take a short coffee break.

To my surprise it worked great. The one fly in the ointment was the fact that we had to change our phone number and I have to admit that the thought of giving up all those fascinating sales and political calls we get every night almost brought me to tears but I figured I could tough it out.

Just to be on the cautious side, we decided to keep our cable phone service for a couple of weeks while we went through the "our little pilot program" and broadcast our new phone number to all our friends and relatives.

Now that I think about it, it's amazing how few of those people seemed to express any great interest in our new number. Indeed, I remember a couple of incidents where the folks I was calling when informed of the new number replied, "That's okay, I'll stick with the old one." I guess they were confused by the whole thing.

So the great day finally arrived...the day I would call the cable company to cancel our old phone service and reap the fantastic harvest of savings we'd experience. And I will admit it wasn't just the savings. I was almost giddy at the prospect of a conversation with the cable representative that would, for the first time in our life upon this planet, result in less money for them and not for us.

The girl I contacted was polite and courteous. There was friendliness there too but it was that cold blooded frightening friendliness you experience when your bank tells you you're overdrawn. But then I proudly said the words that up to this moment in time have eluded us in all the years we've dealt with the utility companies -- "I'd like to reduce our services."

If there was shock there, I didn't detect it in her voice. "Yes sir and what service would you like to cancel?" This was my moment. I spit it out "Our phone service.". "Which part of it, sir?" she asked. "You don't understand," I replied. "All of it." Now I could detect a sense of disbelief. "Sir, you're saying you do not want any phone service?" And then my supreme moment of triumph... "I have secured other means of phone service. By the way, how much will my monthly cable bill be reduced?"

There was a brief pause during which I could detect the clicking of a calculator. I was breathless with anticipation. "As near as I can tell, Sir, your monthly bill will increase 10 dollars."

"What?" I screamed. "That's impossible." "No, not really" she explained. "You see you were involved in one of our big promotion packages which included TV, Internet service and phone service. By eliminating one of the components of the package you force us to bill you for each component separately which totals out to 10 dollars a month more than you paid for the complete package."

By this time my head was swimming. "Okay, just cancel everything and give me basic TV, one cable box and the slowest Internet known to mankind. How much will I save?"

A long pause, then "Sir, I'm coming up with a monthly savings of 10 dollars. However I must point out to you that you'd be giving up about 50 premium TV channels and your super fast Internet to say nothing about your DVR feature, or your extra box for the second TV and ..."

"Never mind," I said dejectedly. "I'll get back with you when I've sorted this out."

An hour later, fortified by a stiff adult beverage, my better half and I talked it over. Call us weak if you wish, but we could not bear the thought of dealing with a computer where you dose off while waiting for it to access a website or watching endless reruns of "Mayberry RFD," "Storm Stories" and the QVC channel every night.

So we made our decision. It was "hit the road Jack," at least for the time being. We'll give you a try in Florida where we don't have these complicated cable packages to deal with. Maybe there you will make sense. But up here in Michigan, we'll stick with what we have.

It's a funny thing. We started off trying to save money and it ended up costing us. I guess you could say the cable company made us an offer we couldn't refuse. The ironic thing is that the magic box did everything it promised. It worked and it did save us money. We just couldn't afford to use it.

What a crazy world we're living in. There's probably a message somewhere in this weird story but I'll be darned if I can figure it out.

MARSP -- Iosco/Alcona Chapter

“Outlook and Opportunities” will be the topic of the next MARSP meeting. The public is welcome to join the Iosco/Alcona Chapter of MARSP Wednesday, Sept. 15 at noon at Barnacle Bill's in East Tawas just off US-23.

A hamburger buffet is promised for lunch, followed by a talk by Kevin Friddle, financial advisor with Edward Jones in Tawas City. Attendees are asked to park in the lot between Sawyer and Newman streets and enter the restaurant through the back door.

The local Chapter of the Michigan Association of Retired School Personnel is collecting new and gently used books for children and young people for the FISH Christmas Gift Shop as its 2010 community service project. Anyone wishing to donate books or bucks, or to learn more about the project, may contact Candace Thomas at (989) 739-2635.

September is the month when many organizations report their members' community service, so a survey of local MARSP members will be made at the coming meeting. Also collected will be recommendations for topics and locations for the chapter's 2011 meetings.

Important information is often shared at the MARSP meetings, including updates on health care and insurance and legal issues. Legislative liaison Rich Hummel will have information about the upcoming November election.

MARSP members include retirees from all positions in any Michigan public school. This chapter's members live in Iosco or Alcona County, though they may have served in public schools anywhere in this state.

Anyone needing a ride or having questions about this meeting may call Sue Duncan at (989) 362-2522, or Martha MacLeod at (989) 362-8473.

The Morning Show By Jim Gagnier

The house lights are out and all's hushed and still
 Then slowly the footlights rise
 It's the first faint streaks of pink and gold
 On the rim of the eastern skies

The rustling leaves now join with the birds
 To herald a new day's birth
 And the lake starts to stir to add to the sound
 In this theater that we call Earth

Now a spotlight tinges the feathery clouds
 With a wondrous crimson light
 And the blue of the sky is magically stroked
 With a brush that is silvery white

A mist is blown in on the restless sea
 And it takes on a mystical glow
 Then a splotch of red where the earth meets sky
 And the great fire starts to grow

And then "center stage" we see him at last
 As he takes a magnificent bow
 And basks in the glow of the whole world's applause
 For he knows his big scene is right now

You know, Mr. Sun, you sure "ham" it up
 But like old Bojangles we know
 That whatever else they might say about you
 You really put on a great show.

Raccoon Riddance

I have three raccoons coming around that I can't get rid of. I've tried jet spray from the hose. I've tried chasing them off. Now they mock me by getting past two raccoon baffles on my post feeder. It's come down to using only safflower seed. Readers, any suggestions?

DNRE requests trumpeter swan observations from public

The Michigan Department of Natural Resources and Environment (DNRE) is asking the public to report any observations of trumpeter swans for a continent-wide census that the DNRE is participating in to determine the population size and distribution of the birds.

"To obtain the best coverage, we are asking the public to report observations of these birds during August and September," said Christopher Hoving, endangered species coordinator with the DNRE's Wildlife Division.

The trumpeter swan's recovery represents another success in endangered species recovery. Historically, trumpeter swans nested in wetlands across much of the continental United States, including Michigan. By 1885, unregulated shooting and wetland destruction had eliminated the population from the state. By 1900, the species was considered extinct. Decades later, two previously unknown populations were discovered in the Rocky Mountains and Alaska.

Efforts to restore the species to Michigan began in the late 1980s. In 1989, 1990 and 1991, trumpeter swan eggs were collected from pairs maintained by zoos and from wild pairs in Alaska. The eggs were hatched and young were reared in captivity for two years at the Michigan State University Kellogg Biological Station. Initial releases in Michigan occurred at Seney National Wildlife Refuge, Rifle River Recreation Area and MSU Kellogg Bird Sanctuary.

In 1992, released birds began to nest successfully and rear offspring, representing the first natural reproduction of the species in Michigan in more than 100 years. Since then, additional birds have been released and the population has grown dramatically. In 2004, 655 trumpeter swans were counted during the late-summer survey.

The highest concentration of the birds can be found in the eastern Upper Peninsula (U.P.), with additional groups found in the Northeastern Lower Peninsula (NLP) and Southwestern Lower Peninsula (SLP). Trumpeter swans now occur in other areas, including Gogebic and Ontonagon counties in the Western U.P., Manistee and Mason counties in the NLP and Washtenaw County in the SLP.

"With oil spills and invasive species like Asian carp and feral swine threatening Michigan wildlife, I sometimes feel discouraged," said Tom Funke, director of conservation for the Michigan Audubon Society. "Then I remember that the trumpeter swan was gone from Michigan for 100 years, and yet their song can again be heard over Michigan waters. That gives me hope."

Although the population is doing well, the trumpeter swan remains protected as a state threatened species, due to the young age of the population and its somewhat limited distribution within the state.

Both trumpeter swans and mute swans occur in Michigan. Mute swans, which are not native and can be quite aggressive as well as destructive to wetland systems, will not be counted. Citizens making trumpeter swan reports should familiarize themselves with the differences between the two species:

- Bill and head: Trumpeters have a black bill with a thin red line on the upper edge of the lower bill, and the head is wedge-shaped. Mute swans have a bright orange bill and a distinctive black knob on the forehead.
- Neck shape: Trumpeter

swan necks are kinked at the base and often form a 'C' curve. Mute swans tend to hold their necks in an 'S' curve with their bills pointing down.

• Voice/Call: Trumpeter swans have a loud, resonant, trumpet-like call. Mutes are generally silent but can issue a variety of grunts, snorts and whistles. Photos and additional information on trumpeter and mute swans can be found on the DNRE website at www.michigan.gov/dnre.

Observers should submit reports online at www.michigan.gov/wildlife under Report Wildlife Observations or by calling (517) 373-1263. Those submitting reports should be prepared to provide the specific location and date of observation. Information on single swans, pairs, pairs with young and flocks with three or more swans will be useful. Only observations made after Aug. 15 should be reported.

"More people have participated in each survey," said Hoving. "Michigan citizens need to act fast because this opportunity only comes every five years."

This project is being funded by the Nongame Wildlife Fund which is supported by citizen contributions. You can support additional work for endangered and threatened wildlife in Michigan through purchase of a "Critical Wildlife Conservation" vehicle registration plate or through a direct contribution to the Nongame Wildlife Fund by sending a check to: Natural Heritage Unit, Wildlife Division, Michigan Department of Natural Resources and Environment, P.O. Box 30444, Lansing, MI 48909.

StarWatch By Gary Becker - September Perseids: Will They Surprise?

It was September 13, 1969 and my friends and I were pulling an all-nighter watching meteors at Pulpit Rock, a 1500 foot ridge 20 miles to the WSW of Allentown, PA. It was the macro sky and meteors that had accelerated my interest in astronomy years earlier. I had first observed the August Perseid Meteor Shower with my cousin John back in 1964. Now it was mid-September on a radiantly clear, fall-like night. We normally observed from dusk to dawn, some of us falling asleep along the way, but it was great fun, especially when the unexpected occurred, like the appearance of a brilliant fireball, scorching itself against the starry vault. After midnight it became quite obvious to me that something odd was happening in the sky. My companions, Mark Adams and Kenneth Fite, were already feeling the crush of the previous day's activities, but pretty soon they were fully awake too! There were meteors radiating from the constellation of Perseus the Hero, but they were southeast of the August radiant. There weren't many at first, because trees blocked our view of the star pattern, but it was obvious that organized meteor activity was taking place. As the hours ticked away and Perseus rose higher into the heavens, meteor numbers increased. Between 2-3:00 a.m. we counted 10 related events. We had rediscovered the September Perseids, a little known and studied minor shower that had no cometary association, but occasionally acted up producing a dozen or more meteors per hour. In 2008 the September Perseids surprised astronomers again, producing 25 meteors equal to or brighter than Jupiter in a four hour period. Now that I'm newly retired with a little more time, I'm hoping to repeat a four decade-old memory and see them again on maximum morning, Thursday, September 9. I am also hoping, maybe even praying, that my summons to jury duty on September 7 won't interfere. www.astronomy.org

MOMENTS IN TIME

The History Channel
 • On Sept. 15, 1858, the new Overland Mail Company sends out its first two stagecoaches, inaugurating government mail service between the eastern and western regions of the nation. Overland later competed with the Pony Express until May 10, 1869, the day the first transcontinental railroad was completed. On that day, the U.S. government canceled its last overland mail contract.
 • On Sept. 17, 1884, Judge Allen disposes of the 13 criminal cases on his Oakland, Calif., docket in only six minutes. Although he apparently set a new record for speed, defendants in Oakland's criminal court did not stand much of a chance of gaining an acquittal. In a 40-year period at the turn of the century, only 1 defendant in 100 was acquitted.

• On Sept. 14, 1901, U.S. President William McKinley dies after being shot by a deranged anarchist during the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, N.Y. When McKinley was operated on after being shot, doctors had failed to find the bullet, and gangrene soon spread throughout his body.

• On Sept. 16, 1940, Selective Service is born as Congress passes the Burke-Wadsworth Act, imposing the first peacetime draft in the history of the United States. By the end of World War II, approximately 34 million men had registered, and 10 million served with the military.

• On Sept. 19, 1959, in one of the more surreal moments in the history of the Cold War, Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev explodes with anger when he learns that he cannot visit Disneyland. Government authorities feared that the crowds would pose a safety hazard for the premier.

• On Sept. 13, 1971, a four-day riot at Attica Prison in New York comes to a violent end as law-enforcement officials open fire, killing 29 inmates and 10 hostages and injuring many more. The prison insurrection was the bloodiest in U.S. history.

• On Sept. 18, 1981, the 20,000-car parking lot at Canada's West Edmonton Mall makes the Guinness Book of World Records as the largest parking lot in the world. However, in Dubai, a 40,000-space parking lot is under construction at a shopping center.

• The record for the longest space flight in history is held by Russian cosmonaut Valeri Polyakov. In 1995 he completed a 438-day stay aboard the Mir space station.

• It's commonly believed that Eskimos have 50 or more words for different types of snow but no word for just plain snow. In point of fact, that statement is misleading, as the Eskimo language is composed largely of roots and suffixes that can be combined in virtually unlimited ways.

• A traditional groom in Norway wears short pants, knee socks, and a silk shirt along with a vest and topcoat.

• Everyone knows that China is the most populous country on Earth today, with nearly 20 percent of the world's population. But you might not realize that there are now more people living in China than lived on the entire planet 150 years ago.

• A recent item in this column stated that Henry Heimlich believed peanut butter to be the food upon which people most commonly choke. As it turns out, that quotation did not come from Dr. Heimlich. Don't be mistaken, though — according to the American Academy of Pediatrics, peanut butter is a high-risk food.

• The IRS reportedly spends $2.45 for every $100 in taxes it collects.

Thought for the Day: "I believe in evidence. I believe in observation, measurement, and reasoning, confirmed by independent observers. I'll believe anything, no matter how wild and ridiculous, if there is evidence for it. The wilder and more ridiculous something is, however, the firmer and more solid the evidence will have to be." — Isaac Asimov
