Lincoln business break in nets two immediate arrests

By Cheryl Peterson
Editor

Suspects in the break in of a Lincoln business were arrested shortly after the incident occurred early Saturday morning.

The break in occurred at approximately 1:30 a.m. Saturday, March 21 at the Lincoln Outdoor Center in Lincoln, according to a report from the Alcona County Sheriff's Department.

Deputies responded to an alarm at the business and found that the building on Second Street had been broken into. They searched the building and area, but did not find anyone.

"A preliminary investigation revealed that access to the building had been gained and some firearms and approximately $300 in cash were taken," said Sgt. Keith Myers. "Further investigation led deputies to a residence within the Village of Lincoln and an arrest was made at that location."

"Within a short period of time deputies established the suspects were on foot, they talked to witnesses at the scene, brought in the state police K-9 team to track and confirm where they went... within a short period of time they apprehended the suspects and recovered the cash," Myers said.

"Officers did a phenomenal job at responding to and arresting suspects in this case."

~ Alcona County Sheriff Douglas Atchison

Myers explained a K-9 unit from the Michigan State Police in Alpena assisted in determining the location of the suspects prior to the arrest of Janson Michael Bauman, 31 and Brittany Jane Printiss, 29, both of Lincoln. They have been charged with breaking and entering with intent and larceny from a building. Bauman is being held in the Alcona County Jail on $100,000 cash or surety bond. Printiss is being held in the Alcona County Jail on a $10,000 cash or surety 10 percent bond. They are both scheduled for a status/probable cause hearing on April 1 and a preliminary examination on April 8.

"Officers did a phenomenal job at responding to and arresting suspects in this case," Alcona County Sheriff Douglas Atchison said. "They established suspects extremely quickly and followed through and made an almost immediate arrest."

Myers explained the stolen guns were not recovered and that part of the incident is still under investigation.

Writing dream comes true with film production

By Mary Weber
Staff Writer

Creativity, passion and a constant drive to go for her dreams has led an Alcona resident into co-writing, co-producing and directing her first short film.

Mary Ellen Jones, known as M.E. to her friends, has embarked on the production of a short film, "The Teacher and the Student" which began shooting this month in Flint, Mich. Jones is treating her new venture much the same way she has lived her life -- to have faith, take chances, work hard and allow enough freedom to let the magic happen.

The film is the first for Mitten Women Productions, Inc., a nonprofit company formed by Jones and her co-writer and producer, Nicole Wallace. According to Jones, it is a dark comedy about a 13-year-old bi-racial girl, with no mother present in her life, who aspires to be a songwriter and actress.

Struggling for self-identity the young teenager meets a homeless thespian who alters her destiny. The film explores her journey through her crisis of not fitting in to becoming a Broadway star with lessons from her unexpected mentor. Issues covered in the story include racial identity, bullying, homelessness and the economic and creative struggles of an artist.

Jones, who grew up in Charleston, W. Va. and later moved to California, began working after college making video tutorials. After a lay-off forced her to seek new employment Jones began a career in the entertainment industry.

Honing her skills and craft, Jones worked her way to becoming a Hollywood producer on "Fresh Prince of Bel-Air,"

"Moesha," "The Wayans Brothers," "Mama's Family" and many other projects. She produced nine series and over 20 pilots for Castle Rock Entertainment, DreamWorks, Warner Brothers, NBC Productions and delivered hundred of hours of projects for ABC, CBS, FOX and other networks.

Jones said the entire time she was producing, she dreamed of writing. "I produced what other people wrote, but I always wanted to write," Jones said. Breaking free from the world of Hollywood, Jones followed her heart to northeast Michigan to settle on a quiet piece of land where her writing creativity would flourish.

Since moving to Michigan she has waded into the publishing world as an author of a chapter in the book "Women on Fire," has held workshops for raising women's self-esteem, volunteered for the Traverse City Film Festival and has mentored others to become inspired and find the magic of their own destiny.

Jones, who met Wallace working on another project, began laying out the story line for the film during a cross country trip they made together from California to Michigan. "While on the road trip we began talking about projects we wanted to do. I grabbed my laptop and just started typing out a plan and treatments. Around Nebraska we started writing this story. It was a fun ride," Jones said.

The entire film is being shot in Flint, Mich. Jones explained she and Wallace chose the area because of its redevelopment and strong art influence. "Michigan is home to a large number of talented, hard-working people. The Detroit and Flint areas are rich with artists of all kinds.

This is impressive to me. In Flint they are training young kids. They have the Flint Youth Theater, the Flint Institute of Music, the Boys and Girls Club and that's just the after school programs. They all work together to inspire children to find their artistic self. It's amazing considering the economic issues of the inner city area," Jones said.

The film will be utilizing students from the youth theater, music performed by original artists from the Flint Institute of Music, the Capital Theatre and the farmers market in Flint. Most of the cast and crew, with the exception of one actor, are from the greater Detroit and Flint/Saginaw areas. Jones is still looking for just the right score for the film and is hoping to find an original Flint sound.

Mott Community College will participate by permitting three student interns to work on the film. She said all of Flint has been very positive, gracious and supportive of the film.

By Cheryl Peterson
Editor

A four-month long investigation into the break in of a local pharmacy has resulted in the arrest of one individual and the identification of a second suspect.

Kenneth William McGill, 24, of National City, Mich. was arrested on March 16 in connection to the November 6, 2014 break in of Snyder's Pharmacy in Lincoln. He was arraigned in 81st District Court on one count of breaking and entering a building with intent, one count of larceny in a building and one count of malicious destruction of utility property.

According to Sgt. Keith Myers with the Alcona County Sheriff's Department, McGill allegedly cut the power line between the utility pole and the building to gain entry into the pharmacy. "More than 1,000 pills and a variety of prescription medication were taken in the break in," Myers said. During the investigation a search warrant was executed on McGill's residence and he was found in possession of large amounts of prescription medications

COMPANION • FRIEND • KILLED!

My wife Joan, 76 years old, with an unresolved medical condition for the last 4 years - 3 MRIs, 2 CT scans, doctor after doctor, test after test. No help, Joan became dispirited. I adopted a therapy companion from the Alcona Humane Society. A little dog named Rusty, I nicknamed him "Little Boy". He was perfect, his antics and constant companionship brought back our smiles and laughter. Then one day Joan went to the mailbox with Rusty, her 19 lb. beagle. Rusty ran down the road a stone's throw. In the middle of a public gravel and stone road he was gut shot dead by a man from a cabin on the other side of the road. Already a felon, he pulled the trigger not once but twice. Joan being on the business end of two high powered rifle blasts, 4 seconds apart, fearing a ricochet bullet, headed for home and safety. (See Mich.gov website has info on firearms and felons in possession, description and penalties such as 750.222).

Alcona County Prosecutor Thomas Weichel filed charges; Killing or torturing an animal and felon in possession of a firearm. I'm told 5 and 4 year felonies. Weichel then without the decency to notify us, dismissed the gun charge. He said there was an argument that a muzzleloader was not a firearm. Really? a lieutenant at the DNR told me to have Weichel call him. I did. A MSP sergeant said yes, a firearm. Everyone I've talked to said ridiculous, a firearm. Judge Frawley then also dismissed as "in the best interests of the state", really? What are those interests, I say certainly not the citizens' and law enforcements' safety. Was not Joan a victim of reckless endangerment to a human being? Was that even considered? I told Weichel no one could reload and fire a muzzleloader in 4 seconds. He immediately said he had 2 muzzleloaders and one just had a primer. A primer in a long rifle barrel doesn't have a loud muzzle blast. Since Weichel was not present how does he know all these details and make decisions about the crime?

This felon pled guilty and was fined, restitution and 120 days in jail in exchange for 2 felonies and the killing of Joan's 19 lb. loving and loveable little friend. Joan is heartbroken and I am too. I have to try and console my wife's crying and sobbing, missing her friend. He won't be sleeping at night on his pillow next to Joan's pillow. Our home is quiet now and it's awful. I talked to a person in southern Michigan who is involved in gun legislation. He said where he is, law enforcement, prosecutors and judges take felons committing gun crimes seriously. My question to Weichel and Judge Frawley: If this happened to you personally or to your 76-year-old mother, would you handle this crime in the same manner? Endangered by gunfire, a felon killing your dog with an illegal firearm. Would you handle this crime seriously!

I am an NRA member, 2nd Amendment advocate, but against felons committing felonies with illegal firearms. If you're a reader and concerned citizen, sound off.

Senator's Local Office Hours

Sen. Jim Stamas (R- Midland) will conduct office hours in Harrisville on Monday, March 30 from 10 to 11 a.m. at the Alcona County Library, 312 West Main Street, in Harrisville. The office hours are open to residents to express their opinions or concerns about state government or to request assistance with a state issue. "I encourage anyone who needs help or wants to express a viewpoint to stop by," Stamas said. "My aim is to provide the best service possible for the hardworking people of the 36th District. I'm excited about continuing a regular series of office hours throughout the district and hearing directly from constituents about state and pocketbook issues." Stamas represents the 36th Senate District, which includes Alcona, Alpena, Arenac, Gladwin, Iosco, Midland, Montmorency, Oscoda, Otsego and Presque Isle counties.

For more information, contact Stamas' office toll-free at (855) 347-8036 or via e-mail at senjstamas@senate.michigan.gov. Residents unable to attend office hours may write Stamas at Senator Jim Stamas, P. O. Box 30036, Lansing, Mich. 48909.

Senior Menu

The following meals will be served at various times during the week at senior centers in Glennie, Greenbush and Lincoln. Anyone planning to attend a meal is asked to reserve a place by calling (989) 736-8879 by 10 a.m. Monday through Friday.

• Tuesday, March 31—Beef lasagna rolls, peas, tossed salad and pineapple.

• Wednesday, April 1—Chicken mostaccioli, corn, tossed salad and pineapple.

• Thursday, April 2—Ham, scalloped potatoes, green bean casserole, red fluff salad and blueberry cheesecake. (This is a special Easter dinner and reservations are required at all sites. Call (989) 736-8879.)

Rock Painting

Turn a Lake Huron rock into a "rock of art" at the Get Crafty session at the Harrisville branch of the Alcona County Library on Monday, April 13 from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Local artist Armando Calles will provide tips and techniques on painting rocks for all levels of adult artists. A sample is on display at the Harrisville branch. Cost is $5 per person and includes supplies and light lunch. Call to register at (989) 724-6796.

Coffee with a Cop

On March 31 officers from Michigan State Police, other law enforcement agencies, and community members will come together in an informal, relaxed meeting to discuss community issues, build relationships and drink coffee. All community members are invited to attend. The event begins at 9 a.m. at McDonald's on Chisholm Street in Alpena.

According to Trooper Ashley Simpson, Coffee with a Cop provides a unique opportunity for community members to ask questions and learn more about the department's work in Alpena neighborhoods while supporting a local restaurant. The majority of contacts law enforcement offices have with the public happen during emergencies, or emotional situations. Those situations are not always the most effective times for relationship building with the community, and some community members may feel that officers are unapproachable on the street. Coffee with a Cop breaks down barriers and allows for a relaxed, one-on-one interaction. The program aims to advance the practice of community policing through improving relationships between police officers and community members one cup of coffee at a time. Contact Simpson with questions at (989) 354-4101 or by e-mail at SimpsonA4@michigan.gov.

Friday the 13th was a lucky day for Matt Caverly of Millington, Mich. He caught this 10.5 pound walleye that was 29 inches long. The lucky strike came at about 10:30 a.m. on March 13 after having been on the ice on Hubbard Lake since 7 a.m. without a bite. "I had a mark on my vexilar on the bottom (26 feet of water) and jigged a little bit and nothing, then I lifted quickly about a foot and the mark came up and nailed my small orange Swedish Pimple tipped with a walleye minnow," Caverly said. "It put up quite a fight, pulling the tip of my pole down hard to the hole several times, I thought for a while it might be a pike because it felt too heavy to be a walleye. When it came up to the hole I got a look at it and saw it was a giant walleye." He hadn't fished Hubbard Lake in several years. His fishing companions were John Rhines, Terry Webster, Brian Timm and Art Shipman. He plans to have it mounted. Courtesy photo.

Jones said about $11,000 of the film's $35,000 budget has already been raised by donations made to their indiegogo Internet campaign. She is hoping to raise the rest through grants and other donations, as well as being very frugal on expenses for the film.

She explained writing, funding and filming are only a small part of producing a film. They hope to be finished with the film in May and will then begin the arduous task of entering it into film festivals.

Unlike feature films, shorts are typically 15 to 20 minutes long and are not shown in movie theaters. "To get a short out there you have to enter film festivals and hope someone sees it and loves it enough to make a feature film of it. Honestly, if we just get some film festivals to get it out there to be seen, we'd be pleased," Jones said.

Navigating the film festivals' time lines and requirements is a full time job in itself, Jones explained. They will have a red carpet premier in the Flint area and hope to have it seen at the Sundance Film Festival in Utah. Jones said she would also like it shown at film festivals in Michigan and wants to have a special showing of it in Alcona County.

A friend once told Jones, "Don't stop before the miracle," and she has taken that advice to heart. "It takes tenacity to realize your dreams," Jones said. "The whole crew is putting 100 percent effort into this. We're shooting a film. We have no idea what's going to happen. We have a plan, but we are hoping something even better happens for it and us. You just don't know. You throw it into the universe and see what happens. That's the fun of this. Working on creative projects and not worrying about the ending.

"There are so many things at play here. There is timing, meeting the right people -- all kinds of things. You have to fund each project. It's a lot to do and it's not for the faint of heart. You have to be okay with uncertainties. It's not like a nine to five job, but most creative work isn't. I think that's why I like it. There's a lot of freedom of expression in writing. You just have to know what you want to get done and do it," she said.

along with other evidence."

McGill is being held at the Iosco County Jail on a charge of breaking and entering a pharmacy in Hale that occurred in September of 2014. Myers said those charges are also a result of this investigation. McGill is being held on a $25,000 cash or surety 10 percent bond.

"It took a considerable amount of work both with officers in my department and jointly with the state police in Tawas... they worked together to combine information. Their diligence and cooperation in this lengthy investigation deserves recognition to everyone involved," said Alcona County Sheriff Douglas Atchison.

Around the same time period in late 2014 two other area pharmacies were also broken into in Alpena and Au Gres, Mich. "That part of the investigation is still open," Myers said. "We believe he (McGill) was responsible for more than these two break ins... During the course of this investigation another suspect has been developed and that part of the investigation remains open at this time.

McGill is scheduled for a status/probable cause hearing in 81st District Court on April 1 and a preliminary examination on April 8.

SENIOR LIFESTYLES

Handy aids for achy hands

Dear Savvy Senior,
What products can you recommend for seniors with hand arthritis? I really struggle with anything that requires gripping and turning, which makes most activities difficult.

Gripless Joan

Dear Gripless,
There are literally hundreds of different arthritis aids and other products on the market today that can help people with arthritic hands and carpal tunnel syndrome.

To find out which devices can best benefit you, a good place to start is to ask your doctor for a referral to an occupational therapist, who can test the strength and functionality of your hands and recommend appropriate aids. With that said, here's a rundown of some helpful products for different needs.

• Kitchen aids: Activities like gripping cooking utensils, cutting and chopping, opening jars and cans, and moving around heavy pots and pans can make preparing a meal much more difficult when you have hand arthritis.

Some products that can help are Oxo Good Grips, which makes dozens of soft, large-handle cooking, baking and cleaning utensils that are easier to grip. And for cutting and chopping the Dexter DuoGlide and Ergo Chef knives are excellent ergonomically designed options.

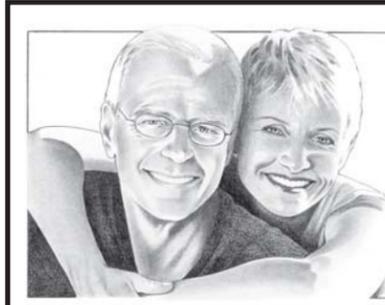

For opening jars, the wall-mounted or under-counter mounted Zim Jar Opener is a top manual opener. It has a V-shaped grip that holds the lid as you twist the jar with both hands. Some other good options are the Hamilton Beach Open Ease Automatic Jar Opener, and a nifty tool called the JarPop that pops the seal on jars so lids can be removed easier.

For opening cans, an electric can opener is the best option. West Bend and Hamilton Beach make some of the best.

And if you're interested in arthritis-friendly pots and pans, look for lightweight cookware that has two handles. These are much easier to lift and move around.

• Household helpers: Turning doorknobs, key locks, twist-handles on kitchen or bathroom faucets, and twist-on lamp switches can also be difficult. To help, there are doorknob lever adapters, key turners, lamp switch enlargers, and lever handles for faucets that provide leverage for easier turning.

• Personal care: Squeezing a shampoo bottle or a tube of toothpaste, or gripping a bar of soap, a toothbrush handle or even a piece of dental floss can make grooming a challenge. Solutions include a wall-mounted soap, shampoo and toothpaste dispenser, which provides easy access to suds. And for brushing and flossing, there are wide-handled, electric toothbrushes and flossers that vibrate or spin to do the cleaning for you.

• Easier dressing: Fastening buttons, pulling zippers and tying shoelaces can also present problems. To help with these chores there are buttonhooks and zipper pulls, and elastic shoelaces, which transform lace-ups into slip-ons.

• Reading, writing and computing: Holding and turning the pages of a book, hand writing and using a computer mouse can also stress arthritic hands.

For readers, an eReader like a Kindle or Nook is recommended because they're lightweight and easier to hold than regular books. For writing, there's the soft rubber Pencil Grip that fits on pencils and pens, and ergonomic-shaped pens like the Pen Again that reduce hand fatigue.

And for easier computing, the 3M Ergonomic Mouse and Contour Roller Mouse can eliminate hand and wrist stress.

• Hobby helpers: There are dozens of arthritis aids for hobbies too. For example, there are automatic card shufflers and cardholders for card players. If you like to paint, knit or crochet, there

Beyond politics — the science behind gray wolves

By Brooke Kansier
Capital News Service

Over a hundred years ago, gray wolves roamed North America from Maine to California. With numbers likely in the hundreds of thousands, the top predator had a large impact on its surroundings, from controlling deer population to altering the behavior of other species such as coyotes.

But during the 1800s and 1900s, this keystone species began to clash with another predator — the humans who increasingly inhabited the land. People significantly reduced wolf populations as they competed for food and threatened livestock, according to Leah Knapp, an ecologist and professor at Olivet College.

It's a clash that particularly resonates today, as politicians, activists and hunters fuel heated debates on the current state of the species' endangered status.

By the early 1970s, the wolf population was so depleted that the federal government had to step in to protect remaining wolves under the Endangered Species Act. The law, enacted in 1973, helped wolves recover from numbers as low as six residing solely in Michigan's Upper Peninsula in the 1960s, to current numbers in the state approaching 700.

These numbers have been enough to prompt some lawmakers and state and federal agencies to call for removing the gray wolf from protection. The public debate has been largely political, but many biologists say that science has to be the deciding factor.

"If we're just talking wolves, I believe the wolves in the Great Lakes states are a viable population," said Brian Roell, a biologist at Michigan's Department of Natural Resources (DNR). "I think a fragile status for them is a twist of the truth."

Others, however, cite the Endangered Species Act's requirement that a species recover not only in numbers, but that it be returned to a significant area of its historic range — the area the wolves inhabited before clashes with humans.

"Scientifically, wolves have not recovered because they have not returned to a significant portion of their historic range," said Adrian Treves, an associate professor of environmental studies at the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Treves and Knapp are among 50 wildlife biologists and scientists who signed a recent open letter urging Congress not to alter the Endangered Species Act or protection of the gray wolf. According to Treves, the species has only returned to about 20 percent of its historic range, which originally included somewhere between 29 and 39 states. The estimated range is so large due to disagreement on whether some areas were populated by the gray wolf or its cousin, the eastern wolf.

"We would like to see more wolves in more places fulfilling their ecological role as top predator," said Jeremy Bruskotter, associate professor of terrestrial wildlife ecology at Ohio State University and another signatory of the letter to Congress. "We want recovery to mean something more than population viability."

While the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's original decision to delist the species in 2012 was — among other factors — based on the species' return to historic range, the agency focused solely on the Great Lakes wolves, designating them as a distinct population. "It really comes down to the technical word and meaning of the word 'endangered,'" Roell said. "So could you have wolves secure in one area, and endangered in another area?"

A federal judge ruled in December, however, that segmenting the wolf populations was "arbitrary and capricious" and violated the Endangered Species Act, resulting in a renewal of its endangered protection. "The judge ruled that the fish and wildlife service incorrectly

School archery program keeps growing

Last spring, when the Michigan Department of Natural Resources (DNR) held its first statewide archery tournament for youngsters in the National Archery in the Schools Program, just over 400 youths signed up to go to Central Michigan University to shoot.

This year, more than 600 youngsters registered.

"It just keeps growing in Michigan," said Kathy Garland, the DNR's National Archery in the Schools Program coordinator. "We get more schools and more kids every year.

"There are 596 schools statewide participating in the program," she said. "Twenty-seven of them are at the tournament. We'd love to have more schools in this tournament, but we're happy just to have them in the program."

The program, which is run largely by physical education staffs at many schools – though some science and math departments sponsor teams – is designed for students in fourth through 12th grades. It's about archery as a recreational activity, a sport and a learning experience. According to the teams' coaches, it's succeeding on all those levels.

Tom Barnes, the gym teacher at Davison Elementary-Middle School on Detroit's east side, brought his middle school team to Mount Pleasant, Mich. made up largely of youngsters who stood out in gym class. "We shoot 3,000 arrows a week in gym class and that doesn't include the archery team," Barnes said. "Archery is a mental sport. There's a physical component to it, of course, but the best archers are those who are focused and concentrating."

The tournament, Barnes said, was just a great life experience for his students. "It's all about the experience," he said. "These are inner-city kids. Our school is 60 percent African-American, 40 percent from Bangladesh. Some of them have only been in the country a short while. They're meeting new people, different people than they've ever interacted with before."

Sarah Staten, an eighth-grader at Davison who said she did "better than I expected" at the event, said she was particularly pleased with the interaction she had with another competitor during the event.

"It was amazing," she said. "I learned a lot from my shooting partner. He was from Gaylord St. Mary's and he was really friendly and helpful – he gave me some tips."

And that's what is expected, Garland said. "In all seriousness, helping students develop their social skills is part of the program," she said.

Jose Ramirez, who teaches gym at the Academy of America School on Detroit's southwest side, said he couldn't bring as many youngsters as he would have liked because of limited space on the bus. He saw his elementary schoolers finish second in the event, their first time at a competition.

"None of them had ever shot archery before," Ramirez said, beaming. But even more important is the lessons the kids are learning.

"This is a life skill," Ramirez said. "When they start out, they experience every negative emotion they can – they're nervous, scared, frustrated and angry at being nervous or scared. But once they start hitting that target, their self-esteem grows. They become more confident. They're learning how to conquer obstacles."

"This is a great experience for our kids – to be able to come here and compete with all these different kids in a college environment. Now they have a common experience with kids from Gaylord and Hartland – a common experience that binds them."

Garland said she was tickled that the Detroit youngsters did so well. "In more rural areas, archery and shooting skills are a way of life, a part of everyday life," she said. "The urban schools are different. A lot of them know nothing about archery. Some of the kids have never even seen a bow and arrow."

"People who you might not think would be into archery are doing it and doing it well. We're definitely reaching people who we haven't reached before. It's a diverse population."

The diversity at the tournament is inspiring. Some of the teams, from more long-established programs, wear snazzy jerseys complete with corporate sponsors. Some teams wear T-shirts. And at least one Catholic school had its team decked out in their school uniforms.

The teams vary in size and in the size of their commitment. Grand Ledge coach Kelly Shaltry brought close to 100 youngsters to compete in elementary, middle school and high school divisions. A history teacher at Grand Ledge High School, Shaltry started the district's program three years ago. He's been extremely successful.

"The first year, the high school team made the nationals," Shaltry said. "Last year they made the nationals and the worlds. By the time the freshmen graduate, we want a state title." (Grand Ledge fell shy of that state title this year as perennial champion Hartland walked away with the bulk of the trophies.)

Shaltry said that thanks to the DNR and Safari Club International, he obtained the resources to build a program that's in the high school, middle school and two elementary schools. "It's one of the largest sports we have," he said.

In contrast, St. Joseph School in Wayne, a K-12 Catholic school with a total enrollment of 18 students, brought a team of 11 boys and girls – every student who was eligible for the program. "We started the program in January," said Sister Mary Petra, the school's principal. "We practiced in a local auto repair shop. I love the program because it's so interactive among the levels. You can have a third-grader shooting next to a senior."

They're not relegated by age level or ability or grade level."

Although the National Archery in the Schools Program continues to grow in Michigan, there are still plenty of schools that are not in the program, Garland said. She'd like them to know they're welcome, too.

designated the distinct population, and incorrectly jumped to the conclusion that the wolf had recovered a significant portion of their range," Treves said.

He also agreed that the population needs to be judged as a whole, and not in individual sections. "How do wolves recover across a significant portion of their historic range if the source populations like Michigan, Wisconsin, Idaho, Minnesota, Montana are isolated and reduced by state policies that prevent wolfpacks from sending out dispersers, and new wolfpacks forming in new areas?" Treves said. "If they lose federal protection, we've seen what happens."

The letter to Congress argues that "wolves are absent from most of the United States, with potentially secure populations in only a handful of states," including Michigan. The letter also says that "in those same states, the loss of federal protections resulted in state-sanctioned seasons on wolves at levels designed to reduce their populations to arbitrary goals, which were based on politics but not the best available science."

The signatories advocated that rather than endangered, the wolves be listed as "threatened," which would allow the species to continue its recovery. A threatened status would give more freedom to the state in terms of dealing with problem wolves, but would not allow recreational hunting.

"Those programs tend to prevent recolonization by the wolves, simply because so many wolves are being killed," Treves said.

While Roell says not all management of the species is necessarily bad, overhunting and methods such as population caps and high kill quotas make it less likely for the wolves to expand their range.

"It depends on the level of harvest, and what the goal of the harvest season is to do," Roell said. "Certainly, it could hamper the wolves moving out from a secure population to other areas because you are lowering the population."

One reason wolves need to be protected is the impact they have on their environment, said Knapp, the Olivet ecologist. The species prevents grazing animals such as deer from overpopulating, which in turn helps plants flourish that would otherwise be overgrazed.

"The idea is, deer eat things up, they eat all kinds of plants, where we're seeing terrible destruction of forests, particularly because there are too many deer," Knapp said. "They eat plants, they eat native wildflowers, they eat baby trees. So they're altering the landscape. The idea with wolves is that they preferentially eat things like deer and moose, and keeps their numbers in check, which allows plants to flourish more."

But it is not the wolves' appetite for deer — rather, their depredation of livestock and the occasional pet — that have led some to call for removing protection and allowing controlled and even recreational hunts.

State lawmakers such as

Sen. Tom Casperson, a Republican representing a large part of the Upper Peninsula, have pushed to allow state regulation of gray wolves. There is also a move in Congress to shift the gray wolf from federal management to that of state governments, although the bill is still in draft stages.

There is also disagreement on whether it is possible for gray wolves to ever return to their full historic range. Highly populated areas may never be able to fully recover the species, including a large portion of Michigan's lower peninsula, Knapp explained. While an endangered or threatened listing for the species could still help it recover some of these lands, Roell argued that human development has taken away a large amount of habitat.

"Obviously, wolves are not restored to their historic range; they only occupy a small portion of their range," Roell said. "But the question you have to ask yourself is, could they ever be restored to their historic range? Given the habitat loss, human encroachment, the habitat just isn't there. They wouldn't be compatible with humans."

Other scientists agree with this, and it is hard to know what a full recovery for the species would look like Knapp said. However, there are still areas for the species to expand, and the wolves are a long way from recovery.

"Wolves can't live everywhere, they wouldn't like it down here with us," Knapp said. "But the point is, there are places wild enough for wolves."

River Aux Sables, DAR

On March 14 the River Aux Sables Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution (DAR) met at the Big Boy Restaurant in East Tawas for the Good Citizens luncheon. There were 10 finalists in the essay contest this year, chosen by the faculty of their individual schools to participate. The essays on patriotism, were independently judged by three people not affiliated with DAR.

Each year it becomes more difficult to determine a winner as these are some of the top students of their schools and are chosen by their teachers as exemplifying the best in today's youth.

This year's winner is Kaylee Bernard of Hale High School who read her essay and was awarded a check for $100. State Representative Peter Pettalia gave the address and presented certificates to each finalists from their region.

For more information about Good Citizens contest or DAR, access the website: www.riverauxsables.mich-dar.net.

U.S. Forest Service prepares for spring prescribed burn operations

The Huron Shores and Mio Ranger Districts of the Huron-Manistee National Forests are planning for spring wildfire-fuels reduction operations, identifying opportunities for prescribed fire projects in Iosco, Alcona, Crawford and Oscoda counties.

Prescribed fires are typically ignited during late afternoon or early evening when temperatures are cooler. During prescribed fires, visitors and residents may see and smell smoke as far as two miles away from the burn location.

According to Dianne A. Berry, public affairs specialist for the forest service, prescribed fires are carefully planned in advance and look at a large number of factors, including humidity, temperature, wind speed and fuel moisture. Personnel remain on site with the prescribed fire the whole time during the burn and will check on it for several days afterward.

In Michigan fire is a natural part of the ecosystem, Berry said. Land management agencies use prescribed fires to reduce the buildup of forest fuels such as dead grasses, leaves and branches.

These fuels increase the ability of a wildfire to spread rapidly on the ground. Other benefits of burning these forest fuels are that nutrients are recycled into the soil; native plant species are encouraged to grow and the spread of both invasive species and diseases among plants and trees can be reduced.

According to Berry, many wildlife species, including turkey, deer, grouse, turtles and butterflies need the jack pine forests, prairies, pine barrens and savannahs created by fires for food, cover and a place to raise their young.

For more information on prescribed fire on the Huron-Manistee National Forests visit www.fs.usda.gov/hmnf. Alerts will be placed on the website the day of a burn to help let residents and visitors know that a prescribed burn will be occurring in their area.

Five birding trails offer wildlife-viewing adventure

Those looking for an outdoor adventure this spring are encouraged to give birding trails a try. With increasing popularity, birding trails are popping up along Michigan's scenic roadways.

Now with five different trails to explore, for the beginning birder or the seasoned veteran, wildlife-viewing hot spots have never been easier to find and enjoy.

With prime birding areas noted along well-known driving routes, a birding trail is like a treasure hunt for those looking to get out and enjoy Michigan's outdoors. Birding trail stops are typically in county parks, nature preserves or Michigan Department of Natural Resources' (DNR) state parks or wildlife areas - allowing access to all who are interested. Visits in May and June will provide the greatest opportunity to witness both migrant and nesting birds. Routes also include many options for amenities such as restaurants, hotels and campgrounds.

Five birding trails, each offering unique experiences, are located around the state:

- Superior Birding Trail - Along Michigan's oldest birding trail, bird species and other wildlife can be found at 10 sites along 150 miles in the Upper Peninsula, from Seney National Wildlife Refuge to Whitefish Point.

- Sleeping Bear Birding Trail - This new trail is 123 miles long, running from Manistee to Traverse City along the scenic M-22 highway and Lake Michigan shoreline, and contains more than 35 birding sites including a "bonus loop."

- Beaver Island Birding Trail - "The Emerald Isle of Michigan Birding," this new trail is located entirely on Lake Michigan's largest island, encompassing 35 sites on over 100 miles of roads.

- Saginaw Bay Birding Trail - This new, 142-mile trail follows the Lake Huron shoreline, stretching from Port Crescent to Tawas Point State Park with more than 20 birding sites.

- Sunrise Coast Birding Trail - Soaring along the Lake Huron coast, Michigan's newest trail features 28 sites along its 296-mile route from the AuSable River in Oscoda to Mackinaw City.

These trails are made possible through the efforts of, and partnerships between, Michigan Audubon chapters, government agencies, land conservancies, private industries and many dedicated individuals working together to create more opportunities to experience the outdoors and visit local communities.

For more information, visit the Michigan Audubon Society birding trail website or www.michigan.gov/wildlife.

Weather Trivia

At what time of day are noctilucent clouds visible?

Answer: At night.

StarWatch By Gary Becker - Sky Announces Spring

Spring has arrived, but it is not yet "in the air" because it will take some time before the mid-northern latitudes warm in response to the increasing energy that we are receiving from a sun higher in the sky. On the other hand, the heavens are in full dress rehearsal for the onset of spring. The winter constellations of Orion, Taurus, Canis Major, and Minor are in full retreat and starting to crowd into the southwestern sky. In one month most will be gone. The moon is also growing in brightness in preparation for Easter and starts off on Sunday as a thin waxing crescent about 3-1/2 degrees from brilliant Venus. Try catching the pair about 45 minutes after sundown, around 8 p.m., when they will be about 20 degrees above the western horizon. Because of the steep angle that the moon's orbit is tilted to the horizon, Luna will actually look like it is grinning at Venus. The smiley moon is also a distinct attribute of spring. By the time it is almost completely dark, around 8:30 p.m., look towards the northeast about halfway up into the sky to view the most famous US star pattern, the Big Dipper. It will be in its early spring location, handle down and cup up. Although in America the Dipper is as famous as any constellation, it was not sanctioned by the International Astronomical Union in 1928 when the sky was divided into 88 areas, and the official patterns recognized. The two top stars of the Dipper, Dubhe (left) and Merak (right) point to the North Star or Polaris which lies about 30 degrees to the left. It appears stationary because the rotating axis of Earth almost points in that direction. If you wait until 10 p.m., the arc of the Big Dipper's handle will sweep gracefully down and eastward across the sky revealing yet another exceptional spring celebrity, Arcturus, of the constellation of Bootes the Herdsman or the Bear Driver. It is an orangey, evolved giant star, the fourth brightest luminary of the night and a next-door neighbor to our sun at a mere 37 light years in distance. Ad astra! www.astronomy.org

 - On April 10, 1866, the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals is founded in New York City by philanthropist Henry Bergh, who pleaded on behalf of abused workhorses. By the time Bergh died in 1888, 37 states had passed anti-cruelty laws.

Strange But True

By Samantha Weaver

- You probably won't be surprised to learn that when author (and noted wit) Oscar Wilde arrived in the United States in 1882, he told the customs officers, "I have nothing to declare except my genius."
- A pregnant goldfish is called a twit.
- If you're planning a summer vacation in Maine this year, you might want to keep in mind that in that state, it's against the law to tickle a woman under the chin with a feather duster.
- Despite the fact that 95 percent of the world uses the metric system of measurement, we in the United States still stubbornly cling to the archaic units of measurement derived from the old British Imperial system. This hodgepodge ranges from the mile (originally the distance a Roman soldier could march in 1,000 double steps) to the foot (originally the length of Emperor Charlemagne's foot, later "standardized" to the length of 35 barleycorns laid end to end) to a yard (the distance between King Henry I's nose to his extended fingertips) to an inch (the length from the tip to the first joint of a man's thumb).
- Brazil nuts do come from Brazil, but they're not technically nuts; they're seeds.
- When you think of the band ZZ Top, you probably think of long beards -- that's become a sort of signature for them. The drummer, though, is beardless -- and his name is Frank Beard.
- A ground squirrel typically has a heartbeat of around 300 beats per minute. During hibernation, though, that drops dramatically -- to only three or four beats per minute.
